Your Excellency:

I and many others around the world hoped to see the Chinese leadership take the opportunity of hosting the Olympics to build China's reputation by making positive political changes, including increased respect for human rights. Instead, the brutal force used to crush the recent demonstrations in Tibet seriously damaged China's image abroad. Rather than showcasing China's many accomplishments, the Olympics have become an exposé of the Chinese government's repressive policies and human rights violations in Tibet and China.

The policies implemented in Tibet in the post-Olympics period will likewise impact China's standing in the international community, for good or for ill. I will be watching closely after the Olympics draw to a close on August 24th, and urge you to explore new policy options that respect Tibetans' human rights under international law. This includes the release of all Tibetan political prisoners and detainees, instituting management by Tibetans of natural resources in all Tibetan areas, limits on migration of non-Tibetans into Tibet, and engagement of the Dalai Lama or his representatives in serious negotiations to conclude a mutually acceptable resolution for Tibet.

Sincerely,

Your Excellency:
